Co-President Karen, with guest speaker Quentin Iskov from the Henley & Grange Historical Society.

Quenten gave a lively and informative talk of the history of Henley and Grange from the early days of settlement to the modern era.

Between 1860 and 1950, Henley Beach and Grange in South Australia evolved from quiet coastal areas to bustling suburban locales. This transformation was deeply influenced by the development of landmarks, the contributions of notable people, improvements in transport, and the establishment of key places, all of which played crucial roles in shaping the region's character.

Historical Landmarks

One of the earliest landmarks in the region was the Grange residence, built by the famous explorer Charles Sturt in the mid-1840s. Although it predated the period by a couple of decades, the residence became a historical touchstone, connecting South Australians with a pioneering past. This house, still preserved today, signifies the area's early association with exploration and adventure.

Another critical landmark is the Henley Jetty, constructed in 1883 and viewed as an engineering success of its time. It quickly became a focal point for recreation. Extending into the Gulf St Vincent, it attracted anglers, strollers, and families looking for leisure activities, thus helping embed Henley Beach as a recreational hotspot in the public consciousness.

Integral Places

Henley Square emerged as an important social and commercial hub in this era, particularly following the development of public transport. The square became a vibrant meeting place, central to the community's social life, especially during the weekend when both locals and visitors flocked to enjoy the beach environment.

Sea baths that once existed at Henley Beach also drove socio-economic engagement within the community. These facilities marked Henley as a premier swimming destination by providing safe environments for sea bathers, contributing to the area's leisurely appeal.

Notable People

A variety of personalities contributed significantly to the area's development and reputation. Sir Langdon Bonython, an influential figure in Adelaide's media and a long-time editor of "The Advertiser", resided in and promoted coastal development, driving the transformation of suburban beachfronts into desirable living areas.

Local government officials and engaged citizens were instrumental in shaping policy and ensuring the area developed infrastructure to meet growing needs. Their work laid a civic foundation that enabled continued growth and camaraderie among residents.

Transport Development

The development of effective transport systems was crucial for growth between 1860 and 1950. Initially, limited access to the region hindered extensive development; however, by 1894, the establishment of the Henley Beach railway line significantly changed this dynamic, making the suburb more accessible from Adelaide.

By 1911, the introduction of tram services, coupled with further expansion of road networks, invigorated growth. These services drastically reduced travel time, allowing more people to visit and settle in the area. At the same time, buses began to complement tram services, providing flexibility and reach to pockets not directly served by fixed rail tracks.

Era of Change and Growth

The era spanning these 90 years saw Henley Beach and Grange convert from tranquil retreats to robust suburban communities, fueled largely by infrastructure developments, community amenities, and persistent urban planning. The train and later tram services were lifelines, connecting these burgeoning suburbs to Adelaide's core, and fostering both residential development and tourism.

The community was shaped by both natural beauty and constructed infrastructure, evolving through the balance of preserving scenic charm while introducing modern conveniences. During the earlier parts of the 20th century, aided by improved transportation, migration to these suburbs increased, making them desirable for both permanent residents and weekend visitors.

By the 1940s and into the early 1950s, economic rejuvenation after World War II brought further growth and consolidation as solid local governance and engaged community groups ushered Henley Beach and Grange into the modern age.

Hi Kidman Parkers

Below is an email and link from Managing Director of Amadio Wines, Danniel Amadio, to enable a 20% discount on any purchases from our recently arranged Sponsors.
They are also the major Sponsor for our Venue of Westward Ho and hence our follow up with them. They are a longstanding (since 1936) and quality Winery as you will see and taste for yourself.
Our Board approved and signed a Sponsorship Agreement with Amadio Wines at our last Board Meeting. The benefits for our KPR are of value around $800 per year.
This will be in saved costs of the weekly gift to Guest Speakers of a quality bottle of wine of value around $22 per bottle.

This would cover us for a year of such gifts or for alternative KPR chosen uses of the Wine.

It is a sole winery Sponsor arrangement, so for KPR events and projects it is our commitment to Amadio Wines that we will use our Sponsors product.
As an example we have upcoming a special Wine Tasting event on a Tuesday Meeting evening on 15th April and Paul Amadio will guide us through the Winetasting.
This will be a great opportunity for us all to taste several of their wines, and hence that will help to guide any buying decisions.
We are also keen to invite some other nearby Rotary Clubs for this signature occasion.

I have already gone online through the below link to register individually for the discount of 20%. The info required is simple and then activation is similarly simple.
Can I please request that we all support the KPR sponsor path and go online promptly to Register then activate. You can determine later whether you wish to individually purchase any Amadio Wines. The ideal time would be after the Winetasting event on 15th April when you have tasted 8 or so of their quality wines.
I have also handled an online order via my credit card....the IT involved is quite simple and Ron Harris additionally is soon similarly placing an order.
A Tax Invoice/receipt is issued by email immediately, together with collection instructions. Usually that will be from their Head Office at 461 Payneham Rd, Felixstow but after the Winetasting, we will look to arrange KPR deliveries direct to Westward Ho so they can be collected on a Tuesday evening.

I am happy to field any questions that you may have.
We will also be recognising Amadio Wines Sponsorship for KPR in our weekly Bulletin.

Cheers and thanks
Warren Hobbs

Hi Warren

Please see below link to send to all members to sign up with , once they have signed in and joined through this link then after placing the order in the shopping cart before checking out it will automatically apply the 20% discount to all wine purchases . Any issues or questions please don't hesitate to contact Sebastien.
